STRIKE FUNDS LOW: ARBITRATION FAILS

Shirtwaist Makers in Need as Employers Reject State Board's Settlement Plan.

MISS MORGAN CRITICISED

Not Qualified to Judge the Issue, Says Morris Hillquit, Representing Her Attack on Socialists.

Commissioner of the State Board of Arbitration on Monday noted that the Affiliated Worker Dress Manufacturers would refuse to send in a second representation for the workers, who would not be able to meet a new demand for a second settlement. The board had previously refused to meet the workers' representatives, and the present request was also turned down.

Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Affiliated Worker Manufacturers, said Mr. J. A. Hillquit, that it was utterly useless to make any settlement with the workers, as the Arbitration Board had already decided against the workers' demand.

Hillquit's Statement Missed

He felt that the workers would not agree to any settlement, and that the Arbitration Board had already decided against them. He also expressed concern about the effect of the workers' demands on the economy.

Workers' Funds at Low Ebb

The Arbitration Board's decision was met with disappointment by the workers, who had been relying on the funds to support their families. The board's decision was also met with criticism by the workers' representatives, who felt that the board had not considered the workers' needs.

Mrs. Morgan's Letter Sent

Mrs. Morgan, the lawyer, who was representing the workers, sent a letter to the arbitration board with the address of the worker's union. The letter expressed the workers' dissatisfaction with the board's decision and urged the workers to continue their struggle for better working conditions.

Mrs. Morgan's Statement

Mrs. Morgan's letter was sent to the arbitration board, who rejected it without comment. The workers were disappointed with the board's decision and urged the workers to continue their struggle for better working conditions.

The New York Times
Copyright © The New York Times